Among the many very rare articles that will soon be offered for sale is an old family carriage, said to have been the one used by President Tyler. It is very much after the order of the modern French deligence, and has blinds to the sides similar to the inside blinds used in many of the houses in the city, but has the pivots of the slats at the edge instead of in the centre, and they work without rods. The inside of the old carriage was well upholstered, but the effect of time upon it is marked, and now it is fast going to decay. The machinery is of very plain construction, and lies hidden within, and is worked by two levers extending from the centre. It is stationed upon four small iron wheels, and weighs several hundred pounds, and when new was drawn by hand.

There are also several old pianos in the Ark of ancient construction, and, judging from the bideous noises made by them as they were banged upon by many of the boys present, appeared to be horribly out of tune. The most striking of these planes was one made by John Broadwood & Son, of London, England, makers to the Queen and Princess; and bears the date of 1806-

An old man from Manchester said he knew that it was the same one that pealed forth in a melodious strain the wedding-march for the Father of his Country. It is built upon the same plan as those of a much more modern date. Lone relic of the past, like the days of auld lang syne, it is mouldering to decay, and soon will be numbered among the ruins of the past."
